An essay is one of the many genres of literature. The word "essay" in French means "sketch" or "sketch". Such works reflect the personal experiences of the author, his opinion and attitude towards a particular problem. However, the essay does not provide direct answers to the questions, it should only show the author's individual view.

Writing an essay contributes to the development of logic, the ability to present arguments, proving one's views. It teaches how to convey information correctly, usually in a conversational style.

To write an essay correctly, you need to know and consider the specifics of this genre because it is different even from regular essays Custom Writing Service.

Features:

The work has a narrowly focused topic, it contains a question and pushes the person to think.

The author's position is subjective. The essay reveals the author's perspective on a particular issue, his worldview, speech, and logic.

The style of speech is colloquial. Complex formulations and terms are not typical for essays, long sentences are rarely used. It is necessary to maintain an informal style so that the reader is imbued with an opinion. But using slang and jargon is not allowed, such a text does not correspond to the genre.

The question or problem on the topic is analyzed in detail. On the topic in the essay you need to show the view from different sides, and the opinion to argue with facts.

Be brief. The volume of the essay is not limited, but, as a rule, it is not large.

The construction of the text is not defined by the rules. Just stick to the logic of reasoning, the text should be consistent.

Contradictory points of view should not be stated.

The purpose of the essay is to encourage the reader to reflect on the topic of the work. The author should not prove that his point of view is the only correct one, he should express it competently, so that the reader can think it over and draw his own conclusions. What words to start with?

A common problem when writing an essay is the choice of the beginning of the statement. This happens to many people, regardless of the point of view itself. Choosing the beginning can take a long time, it confuses the writer and takes up a considerable amount of time. To avoid this problem, use the following tips:

First, formulate the idea of the text, decide on an opinion, and find appropriate sources of information.

Try to apply the following writing technique: reflect on the essay topic in front of you, and write your thoughts quickly and without observing spelling and punctuation, with abbreviations, on a draft. This will save you from searching for words to work with. After that, compose sentences according to all the rules.

Don't wait long for a thought for the introduction. You can start writing the main part of the paper, or you can write the essay in full, and pick up the introduction based on what you've written.

The thesis statement in an essay can be affirmative and questioning. The easiest way is to make the introduction a question paper. Ask a question and give an answer later.

How to learn how to write an essay

The outline of an essay consists of three parts .

The introduction .

It is necessary for the introduction to the topic.

From the introduction, the first opinion of the text in the reader is formed. It can either interest or repel, so experimenting with the introduction is not recommended. In the introduction, specify the wording of the question, its importance and relevance. You can ask a rhetorical question in the form of an argument or provide a quotation, preferably citing the author. Convince the reader of the relevance of the question and get him interested.

Main part.

It reveals the author's point of view on the question or thesis from the introduction from different angles.

The main part does not go as a continuous text, it is divided into smaller parts. In the first, you need to outline your opinion, describe how you understand the topic, and how you treat it. Next, justify your opinion with arguments. Usually these are facts from life, scientific studies, opinions of scientists who are widely known. You can cite facts from history. After the argumentation, give an answer to your question based on the arguments.

Conclusion.

Make conclusions according to the thesis statement. These conclusions should logically complete the reasoning and not leave the topic open.

Most of the impression of the paper you read is formed by the introduction and conclusion. The introduction should ideally intrigue the reader a bit, and the conclusion should give a clear enough answer to the introduction. Help in writing an essay

To add dynamics to your text, alternate long sentences with short ones. Avoid repetition.

The use of complex terms is not recommended, not everyone knows their meaning.

A large number of "general phrases" is repulsive. The essay shows an opinion and the personality behind it.

Refrain from sarcasm and satire. These techniques are characteristic of other genres.

To get the reader in, show your feelings about the issue in the paper, but don't overdo it.

In an essay, an outline can help with the logic of reasoning. Do not deviate from it.
